AMONG THE LITERATI.

Story of a Bootless Hour Among the Intellectual.

The Thin Blood of Scholars-The Endless Orations of Genlus. The Oblivion of Egotism. A Sub-Singe Fright.

Twenty years ago, when the world was young, Mrs. H. was-dare one say it?-the most admired woman in the country. Poet, essayist, orator, reformer, and woman of fashion, both prince and peasant were proud to be tied to her chariot wheels.

And yot there are things more potent than a woman's charms.

One day Mrs. H. invited me to dinner, to which I hastened with eager ear and youthful appetite. I found at table three ladies and a dozen thinkers whose tongues stretch from the Hub to the Golden Gate.

Mrs. H. guided this break-away team with a firm but easy rein; indeed, what would be flattery in speaking of another becomes modest praise in speaking of her.

The blood of scholars is apt to be thin, and a roaring fire had been built to warm up the older gentlemen present. Suddenly I was seized with what one might call a sub-stage fright. I tried to listen to Mrs. H., but a dozen Mineryas and Venuses could not have held one of my ears. A pair of new boots, which my blind hand had pulled on, were shrinking with flendish rapidity. In a few minutes my feet would be no larger than the "golden lilles" of a Chinese indy, What to do? Retreat or take the bit of fate between my teeth? The next moment I had kicked off both my termenters. "So far," I thought, "for the first act, and now, whether the play turns out comedy or tragedy, I will leave to

I had read somewhere that those evils, which we fear never come to pass, and seating myself on that poetle fancy, I listened to the wit and anecdote about me. I remember one story that was told about General Banks. One morning at daybreak during Banks' our lines in force.

The aid waited impatiently; no Banks, no A second aid and still a third-"General, treat, there is danger of a panie.' No Banks, no orders. Atlength half an hour later General Banks issued from his tent in full regimentals, mounted his horse, drew his sword slowly from its scabbard, and exclaimed with sten torian voice: "Let the enemy be repulsed immediately." I thought at the time what perspective not, as whether I succeeded in withdrawing my boots in safety from the dangerous position into which Judas fortune had betrayed them. And yet I need not have given the matter a thought. For no sooper had the spell of the hostess' presence been removed, than each of the famous writers and thinkers around me fastened his eyes on a hidden ideal, and began an endless oration. No Hindoo ascetic could be more oblivious of every thing about him. I verily believe that had Phrynne stood a glance of censure. I drew on my boots as unnoticed as though I wore the helmet of Pluto-in writing of scholars one naturally tries to use their lingo -and rejoined the ladies, having matched a pleasant hour from the very jaws of discom-WILLIAM WASHBURN.

BACTERIAN PHYSIOLOGY.

Imposing Edifices of Expectations and Predictions. Dr. Koch, of Berlin, a year or two ago, made the startling discovery that tuberculous diseases are caused by bacteria, and Dr. Grigg, of Buffalo, has recently made the startling discovery that "all the bacteria of disease are forms of fibrin." Whether the discovery of Dr. Koch, of Berlin, or that of Dr. Grigg, of Buffalo, important as they are pronounced, will have any prophylactic consequence in averting tuberculous disease, or any therapeutic consequence in rendering the treatment thereof more successful, is farther along. Probably the principal result will be the pretty extensive advertisement realized by the discoverers. Suppose that tuberculous diseases are caused by bacteria, and suppose, furthermore, that all the bacteria of disease are forms of fibrin-what then?

Every man, when he thinks he has found out something that nobody has found out before him, or has conceived something that nobody else has conceived, is apt to re gard it as important. Medical men getting unwontedly hold of the modern tools and formulas of science, can, with proper aid from the imagination, find almost anything they have set out to look for; and having found, may erect upon it an imposing edifice of expectations and predictions. A post, then this from the Index-Appeal: prone to look into the interior of things, somewhat indignantly inquires:

"Thou fool! will thy discovery of the cause Suspend the effect or heal it?"

Microscopic experts deal in microscopic things, and think microscopic nghts. Pseudo-science, alike in branenes, is to be known by its habit of transposing cause and effect--putting each in the place belonging to the other. The final cause of tuberculous disease is blood corrupted or deteriorated. Bacteria are everywhere—pervading sound as well as un-sound tissues and fluids; and, if they had the power to initiate disease in the former, there would soon be nothing of animal or vegetable organism left; but bacteria, PROPRIETORS DAILY HONOLULU PRESS Their special multiplication in vitlated localities—as the process of decay everywhere testifies—is not the cause but the effect of pre-established impairment.

War prevails everywhere. There are, continually going on, unconscious as well as conscious struggles for existence. The law of the survival of the fittest is an ordinance of nature to which whatever lives is amenable. Every creature is environed and infested with invisible and impalpable ene-mies, which are only awaiting a breach in its defenses to begin the work of spellation. Against these the sole safeguard is life—the vital principle—that mysterious "mode f motion" whose origin none have discovered, and the terms of whose relations with matter none bave elucidated. So long as there is no part where this is extinct or enfeebled, the fortress is sa e from invation; for healthy structure and healthy function—each implying the other -are effectual barriers. It is not unlikely that diseases-tuberculous and other-may be exacerbated and their progress expedited by bacteria; but that bacteria can create lesions or inoculate sound tissues with any species of decay or disorder is contrary alike to science and philosophy.

The Best Dresued Ape in Paris.

[Paris Letter.] Tue Princess de Metternich, Ambassatress of Austria in Paris during the Secand Empire, was in her box at the opera in 1801, when, for the first time, "Tannhauser" was given in the French capital. The whole house rose in tumultuous disapproval of the opera and its composer, volcing in its hisses the opinion of the court and the town. Mms. de Matternich, pale and dauntiess, rose, and, leaning forward, ner fan shivering in her nervously plenched hands, defled and apostrophized the audience with these words: "To-morrow you will adore what you condemn today !" The paradox of thirteen years ago has become an axiom, and the hooted Wagner has gained the freedom of every operatic stage in the civilized world.

His noble adherent, the woman who had such implicit trust in him and such contempt for the stability and verdict of publie opinion, has just visited Paris. Time has not altered her. She is still what she was then, when her plainness of feature, her strange and piquam ugliness, was re deemed by a supreme elegance, the trail-She was unapproached in wit, repart-o Red river campaign, an aid galloped to his freedom of manner and speech, whether tent. "General, the rebels are attacking she sang the most risque songs of Theresa in the salons of her embassy, or headed the fast and furious revels of Compiegne. She used to say of herself that she "was A L. SMITH, the best dressed ape in Paris." She played our lines are broken, the army is in full reat cards to the very limits of gambling, at tended races, acted in private theatricals, was the life and soul, the fairy and imp of the court of folly and mad pleasure which surrounded Napoleon III; and yet in the midst of her most audacious deflance of social rules, she was ever the haughty Austrian, the proud ambassadress, the indomitable daughter of the princely father who made a bet that he would ride his horse up and down creatures mortals are, for I didn't care half the stairs of a five-storied house so much whether the enemy were repulsed or and won it. She had the original and singular idea of founding a Club of U ly Women, and, more singular still, she actually prevailed upon five others to become members. There was a countess with a justly esteemed literary name, a clever picturesque environs of Paris, a charming woman, lame like Talleyrand, of the purest legitimist faith, renowned for her repartees, and a Russian princess. there the recruits stopped. Beyond those five none were found conscious enough of the inferiority of their other attractions to blazon proudly the confession of their want upon the table and made her famous plea, or | of beauty, and the Club des Laides died Fanny Eissler danced the tarantella among the dishes no one, with the possible exception valiant attitude of the founder, with her of myself, would have flattered her with even raven hair, large black eyes, and Calmuck

His Campaign Ended.

About ten o'clock Tuesday night the telegraph operator in the Times editorial room was receiving over our special wires the United Press report of the opening of the Republican campaign at Burlington, Vt. Among the other papers in the same circuit receiving the messages simultaneously by the same wire was the Petersburg Intex-Appeal. The message ticked out at a slow and steady pace, which seemed to to add dignity to the names of the prominent orators present. The operator in the Index-Appeal office had said to the sending operator in New York at the beginning: "Not feeling very well to-night—been spitting blood—take it easy."

"Cummins, regular press operator, just ahead address." And Senator Edmunds' speech went on, while the body of Ned Cummins, the great campaign ended for him, was car-
